Foreword

"Games provide the opportunity to explore alternate scenarios and develop solutions for complex social issues. They function as a laboratory for testing different approaches and deriving lessons applicable in the real world."

This book presents a new idea for the governance of nations, international cooperation, and, in general, for global governance.

Through it, I am lending support to France in the face of the collapse and global rejection it is experiencing.

This is a helping hand extended to the French people initially, but also to those of other nations around the world.

Preamble

I am a French social engineer with a reformist and unconventional vision for society. Born in Cameroon to a Cameroonian mother, I grew up in various regions of France before dedicating seven years to the aerospace industry. However, I have always been drawn to entrepreneurship and the desire to assist individuals and society.

My international program for societal change is the result of over twelve years of work. Its goal is to establish a just and sovereign civil society, with a focus on empowering nations. Its multidisciplinary approach aims to create massive decentralized collaborations at the local, national, and international levels.

I position myself as an obscured candidate in the 2022 French presidential election, without traditional political affiliation. I publicly assert my claim to govern France, as I am convinced that the current political system is corrupt and ineffective, and that no one has thus far formulated a real solution for both France and humanity to thrive. My ambition is to foster true national cohesion and international peace by altering France's relationship with the world.

My ambitious action plan aims to invigorate regions through intermunicipal cooperation, providing municipalities with complete autonomy and the ability to compete with the private sector. My program extends beyond French borders, and I am seeking international support to implement my vision.

I am the founder and president of an independent French non-profit think tank, 'Le Papillon Source EL4DEV,' which promotes my vision and innovative projects for a sustainable future based on fundamental values.

In conclusion, I bear a bold vision for society, offering an international program of societal change and decentralized diplomatic actions to bring about positive transformation to France and beyond. I aim to build bridges of cooperation and foster cohesion both nationally and internationally for a better world.

Chapter 1 – Why do we need to change the world order?

Changing the world is essential to address the multiple challenges humanity is facing. Here are the reasons why this change is necessary:

1. Collapse of Civilization: The evident collapse of our civilization demands global awareness. It's time to rethink, reform, and initiate radical change to evolve towards a different state.
2. A New Facilitator-Actor: A new facilitator-actor must embody the collective destiny of peoples and become the primary level for building social cohesion, redistribution, and solidarity. A new philosophical tradition must be established to strengthen the gradual construction of an ethical international community.
3. Reasons for the Collapse: Issues such as massive deforestation, biodiversity loss, negative environmental changes, post-COVID economic crisis, overconsumption of natural resources, economic disparity between elites and the rest of the population, religious and ethnic communalism, class, race, and gender struggles, mass immigration, destruction of family values, and growing individualism are all factors contributing to the on-going collapse.

4. Towards Devastating Civil Wars: Heightened social divides and growing communalism can potentially lead nations towards devastating civil wars.
5. Unbalanced Diplomatic Model: The old diplomatic model, primarily focused on economic relations, ignores the majority of societal aspects and creates imbalances between states.

In the face of these challenges, profound and global change is necessary to build a fairer, sustainable, and harmonious future. This requires collective awareness, cooperative efforts, and a willingness to rethink our economic, social, and diplomatic models to foster a more balanced and prosperous world.
