Foreword

Camille is a woman who has just met Alexandre. She wants to live with him at all costs. She is faithful to him and tries to do her best to please him. But what she doesn't know is the past of that man she's seeing for the first time. A past that would have left its mark and could destroy their love. Both of them will commit mistakes that will cost them dearly. What impact will this have on the couple? Since the two adults hope to be married soon.

Love will be around

Camille is a young woman who has never discovered love. She wants someone to hang on to so she can lead a life worthy of the name.

But because of the various disappointments, she prefers to withdraw and wait for heaven to open these doors to her.

This is how, after more than two years of celibacy, she came upon the charm of a certain Alexander a very handsome man who also had a penchant for beautiful women.

He had also wished to meet the one who would be very important to him; the one with which he would spend a love life.

He met Camille in a supermarket when she came to buy food so she could cook her grandmother a wonderful meal.

She had lost her parents when she was still very young and it was this old mother who raised her until she reached a major age. She was the only daughter and had grown up in very strict conditions. The time had come for her to open herself to the one to whom she had just offered her heart.

It was not easy, because Alexander had to be very patient to be able to please her. Camille was a shy girl.

For her, meeting a man was the most extraordinary thing in the world, so that at times she accused heaven of not allowing her to introduce her "prince charming" to her parents before fate took them from life.

Sometimes, she cried with a hot tear, because fate had not allowed her parents to see her become happy!

Their domicile was in the eleventh arrondissement of Paris and for that of Alexander in the ninth.

He often had to leave his home to visit his fiancée who had taken care to introduce him to his grandmother well after several months.

Camille always said that she would never present to her dear one a man who would never love her, for it would be contempt that would not be forgiven her at all. Alexander was therefore welcome and when often this grandmother saw him arrive, it was with a big smile that she welcomed him at the threshold of the door. It was for the first time that he was thus received; he who in the past had suffered from several false loves.

He could only boast of having met what he called a true family. He was a man who lived alone in an apartment that he had arranged for himself. At the age of thirty-five, he graduated in computer science and
