Prologue

From the earliest developments of thought, mankind believed that some significant coincidences were signs by which a higher philosophical or divine level sought to inter-dialogue with men.

In the last three centuries these convictions had been erased by new scientific tendencies. Extraordinary facts were considered as simple cases. Anyone who wanted to interpret extraordinary events as divine signals was destined for irony.

In the same way the visions of the future were considered illusions or even signs of imbalance. This happened despite the fact that many people had experienced these extraordinary facts.

Science denied the existence of a psychic dimension with which the human mind could interact. According to the common opinion, the only existing reality were material objects. However, in the 1980s, many experiments in quantum physics demonstrated the existence of a universe that is not just composed of matter. This universe contains a level in which energy and information do not suffer the limits of space and time typical of classical physics. This confirms all the intuitions matured in the history of humanity. Among these intuitions the concept of "Soul of the World" enunciated by the Greek philosopher Plato. More recently, the Swiss psychologist Carl Gustav Jung has elaborated the theory of the "collective unconscious".

This book avoids investigating excessively specialized topics. The author clearly accompanies the reader in understanding the three levels that form a single reality.

The first level is the physical one, which is part of our daily experience. The second level is the one described by quantum physics, typical of the smallest elementary particles of atoms.

The third is the psychic level called "non-locality". It is the spiritual level, which can not be physically located anywhere.

This path of knowledge refers to recent discoveries recognized by official science. The strange coincidences and phenomena of the mind become important parts of a new and surprising reality.

Ordinary coincidences and significant coincidences

The coincidence consists of two facts connected to each other in order to determine a logical sequence. A coincidence can be programmed by the will of men. A classic example of pre-established coincidences are the timetables for passenger transport lines. Depending on the scheduled times, a means of transport arrives at a station. Immediately after the journey continues with another means of transport. All this is normal. But there are also coincidences that occur without any predictions.

Let's take an example. I go to the supermarket, go to the bread counter and take a number. My reservation has the number 64.

Then I go to the fish counter and even here my reservation has the number 64. All this is very ordinary at the time.

The situation becomes strange if, coming out of the supermarket, I get on the bus number 64. On the bus I meet a friend who turns 64 on that day. I congratulate him and I go down right in front of the kiosk of Marconi Street 64. From the store I buy the number 64 of my favorite magazine. At this point, what do you think? I could begin to wonder if there is not something curious about the fact that the number 64 is repeated continuously.

To tell the truth, such numerical sequences happen with a certain frequency, but we do not notice it, because we are busy thinking about something else. Therefore, the coincidences linked to a number, similar to the one told, are strange but we do not take them into consideration. In fact, we do not notice these. These coincidences do not become "significant". Many coincidences could become significant if we became aware of them and started to make the brain work.

The question should be: what sense does this have for my life?
